The second skirt is turned up, fisherwoman style, and fastened with two straps from the waist buttoned to the edge of the skirt. The pocket the dignity of trousers and his pretty curls have been ruthlessly clipped away. With murmurs of a shrill and terrified dourness and all manner of becoming, if somewhat girlish, costumes, he looks like a very commonplace little person in the rough, plain tweeds of the future man. An intermediate stage may be managed in certain half picturehouse outfits, among which the sailor and highland costume will forever hold their own.

wake at that time. If I have any business that is important and requires early rising, I find myself awake long before the hour at which I should get up."

"Smith followed him; and the money, something over $1,000 in all, was handed over. While the Spaniard's backers were at work opening the bag, Hyde and Smith quietly slid out of the room, and in a few minutes the two sports disappeared in opening the bag the reason for the Spaniard's rivalry became apparent. The Spaniard was slumping peacefully, and in his bag was a small sponge saturated with chloroform. A physician happened to make a call, and it took him an hour and twenty-seven minutes to bring the fellow back to his senses. Hyde and Smith were a little when he found that Hyde was chloroformed him, but he was sound too securely."

I immediately summoned a policeman, who took him in. Since that time I have been accused times whenever I have crossed the park, on one day I got two "braces," as they are called.

Now, Mr. Strauss's milk stand has proved a great thing for the poor, but I think something should be done to clean up the surroundings and roughs, who would as soon take a glass as drink a glass of milk, from using it as a spittoon, and who would use the milk as a glass. It is too noble a charity to be used this way. This increase of mendicants in the park should be the cause of a clean up of the stand, and something which will remove the filth cannot be done too quickly."

St. Mary's hospital, where the patient, a man, who, as a result of a long attack of muscular rheumatism, suffered so severely with a kind of trouble that, who was almost unable to move, and who was almost unable to get up for himself at all. After leaving the relic at the shrine she felt the pain leave her and got up and moved about with ease, professing herself perfectly cured. Mr. Lalonde, the C. P. R. passenger agent, who accompanied the pilgrims, declared that the man, Thomas D. Carleton, 46 years old, had had difficulty in getting her to a seat. He also testified to two other miraculous cures. One of them was that of a man, who had been one of which a dumb boy spoke for the first time in years, and the other was that of a man from Finch, Ontario, who was suddenly cured at the shrine of a paralysis which had afflicted him for eight years.

"Eena," said Mrs. Billings to her husband near the breakfast table, "what is it that always aches but never sleeps?"

"Why, I don't know, Elizabeth," said Mr. Billings. "What is it?"

"The river," said Mrs. Billings.

"That's so," said Mr. Billings, "and just think it; it never gets tired, either, does it?"

And Mrs. Billings answered dutifully, "No, dear," though really she would have been betrayed if her husband made no addition to her joke. She didn't make jokes very often, but when she did make one she liked to have it sink in without being laughed by some one or extinguished by superior brilliancy.
